Castro's Cuba: Quo Vadis?

Authored by Dr. Francisco Wong-Diaz.

The United States, particularly the Army, has a long history of involvement with Cuba. What would be the strategic and political implications attendant to Castro's eventual demise or incapacitation?

Added December 22, 2006

Type: Monograph

Learning from Iraq: Counterinsurgency in American Strategy

Authored by Dr. Steven Metz.

In Iraq the U.S. Army has undertaken counterinsurgency, a type of activity it thought it had left behind with the end of the Cold War. In the long war against terror, counterinsurgency will remain a central element of American national security policy so it is important to assess the strategic implications of the Iraq campaign.

Regional Fears of Western Primacy and the Future of U.S. Middle Eastern Basing Policy

Authored by Dr. W. Andrew Terrill.

The United States has a core national interest in maintaining peace and stability in the Middle East as well as containing or eliminating threats emanating from that region. Yet, there is often disagreement on the ways to best achieve these goals.

Russian Defense Reform: Current Trends

Authored by Dr. Irina Isakova.

Since the fall of the Soviet Union, the topic of Russian defense policy has not received great attention. The rebuilding of Russian military strength is a high priority of President Vladimir Putin, and one to which he and his subordinates have devoted considerable time and resources. Therefore, inattention to Russian defense policy is unwise and even dangerous because it causes us to overlook potentially major changes not only in Russian policy, but in international affairs more generally.

Type: Monograph

Russia, Iran, and the Nuclear Question: The Putin Record

Authored by Dr. Robert O. Freedman.

This monograph demonstrates that Moscow, especially in the Putin era, has not been helpful with U.S. efforts to curb Iran's nuclear program. It also illustrates the dangers Moscow faces in pursuing such a pro-Iranian policy.

Iran, Iraq, and the United States: The New Triangle's Impact on Sectarianism and the Nuclear Threat

Authored by Dr. Sherifa D. Zuhur.

This monograph considers the issues of Iranian influence in Iraq, and its impact on continuing sectarian violence there. The situation has been further complicated by the post-2003 change in the Iraqi Shi'a community's status, Iran's development of a nuclear program, and international efforts to contain that program.

Type: Monograph

The NATO-Russia Partnership: A Marriage of Convenience or a Troubled Relationship?

Authored by Dr. Stephen J. Blank.

Since 2002 Russia has embarked upon a relationship of partnership with NATO, but close examination of this partnership shows an enormous amount of Russian ambivalence and, indeed, growing resistance to many of NATO's activities and programs. This growing ambivalence, and even estrangement, reflects both domestic Russian trends and the deterioration of East-West security ties.

Ukraine After the Orange Revolution: Can It Complete Military Transformation and Join the U.S.-Led War on Terrorism?

Authored by Dr. Deborah Sanders.

Ukraine's ability to contribute to the U.S.-led war on terror through the provision of niche capabilities such as peacekeeping troops is contingent on successful military transformation, democratic consolidation, and good relations with neighbors. However, a more democratic Ukraine with democratically controlled armed forces might be less willing and able to deploy peacekeeping troops into a complex theatre of operation.

Alliances and American National Security

Authored by Dr. Elizabeth Sherwood-Randall.

In this era of American predominance, alliances are more compelling than ever. The United States needs allies to generate capabilities that amplify its power, create a basis of legitimacy for the exercise of its power, avert impulses to counterbalance its power, and steer partners away from strategic apathy or excessive self-reliance.

Confronting the Unconventional: Innovation and Transformation in Military Affairs

Authored by David Tucker.

Limitations on the ability of the U.S. military to innovate and transform to deal with irregular warfare pose policy and strategy dilemmas. The best way to deal with these dilemmas is to establish a new kind of interagency organization devoted to irregular warfare and an irregular warfare organization within DoD.

North Korean Civil-Military Trends: Military-First Politics to a Point

Authored by Mr. Ken E. Gause.

Since 1998, Pyongyang's foremost policy has been declared as "military-first." Military leaders in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea are very powerful and influential figures. Who are they? What kind of power and influence do these leaders wield, and how do they exert it? How do KPA leaders interact with dictator Kim Jong Il and their civilian counterparts?

How to Make Army Force Generation Work for the Army's Reserve Components

Authored by Lieutenant Colonel Joseph E Whitlock.

This paper describes ARFORGEN, discusses some of its critical assumptions related to reserve component (RC) units, and explains what changes are required at the Department of Defense (DoD), Department of the Army (DA), and the individual RC levels so that the Army can integrate its RC units fully into ARFORGEN. The paper details needed changes at both the institutional and operational level at DA and DoD.

String of Pearls: Meeting the Challenge of China's Rising Power Across the Asian Littoral

Authored by Lieutenant Colonel Christopher J Pehrson.

The author describes the "String of Pearls" as the manifestation of China's rising geopolitical influence through efforts to increase access to ports and airfields, develop special diplomatic relationships, and modernize military forces that extend from the South China Sea through the Strait of Malacca, across the Indian Ocean, and on to the Arabian Gulf. The monograph examines the "String of Pearls" as an evolving maritime component of China's national strategy, implications for the U.S.-China relationship, and broader U.S. policy implications for the entire region.

2006 Key Strategic Issues List (KSIL)

Edited by Dr. Antulio J. Echevarria, II.

In today's dynamic strategic environment, political changes can become challenges very quickly. Any list of key strategic issues must, therefore, include the broadest array of regional and functional concerns. This is a catalogue of significant issues, arranged as potential research topics, of concern to U.S. policymakers. As such, the KSIL is a ready source of topics that members of the defense community and academia can use to focus their research efforts.

Taming the Next Set of Strategic Weapons Threats

Edited by Mr. Henry D. Sokolski.

Long discounted by arms control critics, traditional nonproliferation efforts now are undergoing urgent review and reconsideration even by their supporters. Why? In large part, because the current crop of nonproliferation understandings are ill-suited to check the spread of emerging long-range missile, biological, and nuclear technologies.

Friction in U.S. Foreign Policy: Cultural Difficulties with the World

Authored by Lieutenant Colonel Andrew W. Stewart.

The United States is so culturally blind by virtue of its successful "New World" experience of assimilating foreign cultures that it is unable to recognize the possibility that there are viable competing ideologies to American ideals for the world, including the Islamic world, China, and Latin America. If the United States were more "street smart" on the world scene, it could better identify nuanced subtleties and better leverage allies, who, in turn, are better positioned to further American ideals abroad.

Addicted to Oil: Strategic Implications of American Oil Policy

Authored by Commander Thomas D. Kraemer.

In his 2006 State of the Union address, President Bush proclaimed that "America is addicted to oil, which is often imported from unstable parts of the world." The plan he then proposed is step one in weaning America from its addiction, and is a necessary but not fully sufficient step to ensuring our future national security through Middle East Oil independence.

Kim Jong Il and North Korea: The Leader and the System

Authored by Dr. Andrew Scobell.

North Korea is both a paradox and an enigma because on one hand, it appears to be a very powerful state—possessing the world's fourth largest armed forces, a sizeable arsenal of ballistic missiles, and a worrying nuclear program—but on the other, it is an economic basket case in terms of agricultural output, industrial production, and foreign trade exports.

Training Indigenous Forces in Counterinsurgency: A Tale of Two Insurgencies

Authored by Dr. James S. Corum.

The Malaya and Cyprus insurgencies provide a dramatic contrast to the issue of training local security forces. In Malaya, the British developed a very successful strategy for training the Malayan Police and army. In Cyprus, the British strategy for building and training local security forces generally was ineffective.

Recognizing and Understanding Revolutionary Change in Warfare: The Sovereignty of Context

Authored by Dr. Colin S. Gray.

Revolution in Military Affairs (RMA) was the most widely used, and abused, acronym in the U.S. defense community in the 1990s. Subsequently, transformation has superseded it as the preferred term of art. For the better part of 2 decades, American defense professionals have been excited by the prospect of effecting a revolutionary change in the conduct and character of warfare.

Strategic Theory for the 21st Century: The Little Book on Big Strategy

Authored by Dr. Harry R Yarger.

Strategy is often used as a general term for a plan, a concept, a course of action, or a "vision" of the direction in which to proceed at the personal, organizational, and governmental—local, state, or federal—levels. Such casual use of the term reduces strategy to just a good idea without the necessary underlying thought or development. What is the true meaning of strategy?
